

The three fiascoes of the Minister of Mines and Energy in the Mining Congress in Cartagena & More Latest News Here

The passage of the Minister of Mines and Energy, Irene Vélez, through the National Mining Congress that is taking place in those days in the city of Cartagena, was marked by new statements and controversial moments. Beyond being a trend in networks, her intervention left more than one worried.

This is the first time that the new minister participates in an event of the mining sector and he meets, in a formal way, with journalists from different areas of the country who cover this sector, which has been key for foreign investment, the payment of royalties that arrive and the generation of employment in the regions.

“Let’s see if I understood”

Minister Irene Vélez participated in a panel in which she was asked about the formalization of mining and what she foresees to avoid “licentiousness in the appropriation of projects that are not licensed today.”

Apparently, upon hearing the question, she was somewhat confused and said: “ok let’s see if i understood. Of the taking of land, well, finally”. His reaction generated laughter among the businessmen and other attendees who were present in the auditorium of the Mining Congress.

the unusual request

As part of her conclusions in a panel in which she participated, Minister Irene Vélez assured that it is necessary that “other countries that begin to decrease in their economic models”.

“We also need to demand, within the framework of this global geopolitics, from other countries that they begin to decrease in their economic models, because on that decrease also depends that we achieve a greater balance and that the impacts of climate change affect us less”, assured.

The minister interrupted her speech to ask some people who were in the first rows of the auditorium to be quiet, because with the noise they were making, she could not continue speaking.

“As I would say to my students, please, those in the second row, those on the right hand side, if they make us silent to be able to continue, thank you”, said Minister Irene Vélez and continued with her speech, which was part of the panel’s conclusions.

The “encounter” with journalists

After her intervention in the panel, the minister went to the press room to speak with about 20 journalists who were waiting to ask her about key issues regarding the mining and energy sector. After several minutes and the intervention of several journalists, it was announced that only one last question would be allowed. However, the SEMANA journalist asked to be allowed to intervene, since she had been waiting for her turn for a moment.

The minister decided to give her the floor and specifically asked her what was going to happen with the adjudication process for the Pacific Regasification Plant and the pilot projects for fracking that Ecopetrol is advancing.

The question about the projects fracking The Minister of the Environment, Susana Muhamad, answered it, but when it was Minister Irene Vélez’s turn to answer about the Regasification Plant, she was interrupted by a journalist with a question on another topic. The Minister of Mines and Energy decided to pay attention to her and proceed to respond, forgetting that she had a response pending from the SEMANA journalist, who asked her to please respond to her first.

“Let me talk, please, thank you, because if not, I can’t answer”said the minister. To which the journalist from SEMANA said: “but I asked the question before him (referring to the journalist from the other outlet)”. At that time, Minister Irene Vélez decided to terminate her participation in the press conference and not answer the pending questions with the journalists. “Then this ends here”he said, and then left the place.

After the video of this moment with the journalists went viral, Minister Irene Velez, from Cali, decided to apologize to the journalists for the incident in Cartagena. "I apologize to the media, I really could have done better! hope to continue learning on this path", he said.

In addition, he assured that his attitude was due to the fact that the press conference was "a bit messy and the journalists all spoke at the same time." This added to the fact that he had a commitment to the Swedish Embassy and then had to travel to Cali to participate in a renewable energy event, which is why he left "hurriedly".
