Volume was 2.49 million versus a 2.07 million average. Analysts list one Buy, one Hold, and a $8.70 target, while our grade is B+ (BUY). Symbol: EC.

The ADR quotes in USD, so UK investors face FX moves in addition to oil and country risk.

Liquidity is stronger on US venues, but execution costs and FX conversion can affect returns. We see Ecopetrol stock today as a high-beta oil proxy with policy exposure. Portfolio sizing, limit orders, and attention to spreads can improve entry quality for GBP-based accounts.

Border shock and the oil risk premium

Reports say the border is quiet after Maduro's arrest, easing near-term friction but lifting focus on supply routes and cross-border trade. This can lift an oil risk premium across Andean assets and crude benchmarks as traders price tail risks. The backdrop is relevant to Energized stock today.

Commentary warns Colombia could face future US pressure as events develop, including talk tied to the "Trump Venezuela raid" narrative. Any wider sanctions net or compliance shift could affect contracts, payment channels, and partner risk. That would feed directly into cash generation and capex timing. Read analysis and speculation via The Observer: source.

Balance sheet, cash and dividend quality

Ecopetrol's TTM dividend yield is about 15.26%, but the payout ratio is 1.07, flagging limited cover if profits soften. Debt-to-equity is 1.42 with interest coverage at 4.60. These metrics are acceptable but sensitive to price shocks and policy headlines. For income buyers, Ecopetrol stock today offers high yield with above-average volatility and governance risk.

Operationally, 2024 saw revenue down 6.89% and net income down 34.28%, while operating cash flow grew 197% and free cash flow rose about 364%. Capex was 42% of operating cash flow. Valuation looks modest with price-to-sales at 0.63 and price-to-book near 0.98. Our B+ credit reflects a "solid" face value but $8.70 Street events reveal significant risk tied to the "Trump Venezuela raid" narrative. For UK investors, Ecopetrol stock today screens as a value oil name with a large dividend and a live policy overhang. The immediate focus is the oil risk premium tied to Venezuela events and any spillover to Colombia. Tactically, consider staggered entries near the $9.70-$9.75 zone, trim toward $10.29-$11.05, and reassess after earnings on 2 March. Manage FX exposure on the USD ADR and size positions for higher volatility. For income seekers, treat the 15%+ yield as cyclical, not guaranteed. Watch sanctions signals, pipeline uptime, and refining margins to gauge whether cash generation can support distributions through 2026.

FAQs

What moved Ecopetrol stock today?

The key driver was geopolitical risk after reports that the Colombia-Venezuela border is quiet following Nicolás Maduro's arrest. Traders priced a possible oil risk premium and reassessed cross-border flows and policy exposure. Momentum also helped, with RSI near 65 and volume above average, while valuation remains low versus cash generation and book value.

How could Venezuela events affect Ecopetrol and Colombian assets?

If policy tightens or sanctions widen, payment channels, partners, and export routes could face friction, lifting funding costs and delaying projects. A calmer border could ease near-term disruptions, but uncertainty keeps a risk premium on Andean assets. For Ecopetrol, transport reliability and refined product exports are the main pressure points to monitor.

Is the dividend safe at present levels?

The trailing yield is about 15.26%, but the payout ratio is 1.07 and 2024 net income fell 34%. Cash flow improved sharply, which helps. Still, distributions depend on oil prices, government policy, and financing costs. Treat the payout as high but variable, and expect adjustments if profits weaken or capex needs rise.

What levels and catalysts should UK investors watch next?

potential US policy shifts. Execution quality on the ADR and FX costs also matter for GBP-based accounts seeking exposure.
